Some of our superhero researchers at Telethon Kids work in the community, including in remote and regional parts of Australia. This type of work is very different from our work in the labs, clinics and offices because our researchers need to travel long distances to reach some of the communities. Our research team visit kids and their families for check-ups, tests and assessments. We need to take all of our special equipment and safety gear with us in the four-wheel drive car. Our work in the community includes research into skin health, rheumatic heart disease, wet cough, lung health and child development.
